The Bombing

On November 24, 1917, at approximately 12:40 p.m., a bomb exploded at the Milwaukee Police Station, located at 735 West State Street. The bomb was placed in a suitcase and left in the station's basement. When the bomb exploded, it killed nine people and injured dozens more. The victims included police officers, civilians, and a young boy.

The bombing was one of the deadliest acts of terrorism in American history. It occurred during a time of heightened tension in the United States. The country was involved in World War I, and there was widespread fear of sabotage and espionage. The Milwaukee Police Station bombing raised fears that the war had come home to America.

The Investigation

The investigation into the Milwaukee Police Station bombing was one of the largest and most complex in American history. The FBI was called in to assist local police. The investigation quickly focused on a group of German anarchists who were known to be active in Milwaukee.

The FBI arrested several suspects, but no one was ever convicted of the bombing. The investigation eventually went cold, and the case remains unsolved to this day.

The Aftermath

The Milwaukee Police Station bombing had a profound impact on the city of Milwaukee and the nation as a whole. The bombing raised fears of terrorism and led to increased security measures at police stations and other public buildings.

The bombing also had a lasting impact on the victims' families and friends. Many of the victims were young men who were just starting their careers. Their deaths left a hole in their families and communities.

The Book

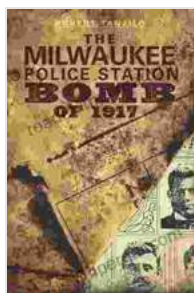

The Milwaukee Police Station Bombing of 1917: The True Crime Story Behind a Deadly Act of Terrorism is a new book that tells the story of the bombing and its aftermath. The book is based on extensive research, including interviews with survivors, family members, and law enforcement officials.

The book provides a detailed account of the bombing, the investigation, and the lasting impact of this tragic event. It is a gripping true crime story
