In the months and years after John's death, Sarah struggled to cope with her grief. She withdrew from her friends and family, and she lost all interest in the things she used to enjoy. Sarah felt like she was living in a fog, and she didn't know how to find her way out.

One day, Sarah decided to start writing about her experiences. She began by writing letters to John, telling him about her day and how much she missed him. Over time, Sarah's letters became more and more personal. She began to write about her struggles with grief, her anger, and her loneliness.

Writing helped Sarah to process her grief and to begin to heal. She realized that she was not alone in her pain, and that there were other people who had experienced similar losses. Sarah's writing also helped her to find her voice and to express her emotions in a healthy way.
