- The Fourth Dimension: Gurdjieff believed that our ordinary perception of the world is limited to three dimensions, and that there exists a fourth dimension accessible through conscious effort.
- Man No. 4: Gurdjieff described human beings as "Man No. 1," trapped in a state of mechanical living. Through conscious work and transformation, we can evolve into "Man No. 4," a higher state of existence characterized by integrated consciousness and expanded awareness.
- Centers and Functions: Gurdjieff identified three main centers within the human being: the Intellectual Center (thinking), the Emotional Center (feeling), and the Moving Center (ng). By harmonizing these centers and developing their functions, we can achieve greater balance and integration.
- Cosmic Octaves: Gurdjieff proposed a hierarchical structure of the cosmos, consisting of seven octaves, each representing a different level of consciousness and manifestation.

- Remember Yourself: By constantly reminding ourselves that we are not merely mechanical beings but conscious observers, we can break free from habitual patterns and gain greater control over our lives.
- Stop Machine: This exercise involves stopping the automatic responses and reactions that dominate our daily lives, creating space for reflection and conscious choice.

- The Law of Seven: This law suggests that all phenomena undergo seven stages of development, from inception to completion.
- The Law of Recurrence: Gurdjieff believed that cosmic patterns repeat themselves at different levels of scale, from the microcosm to the macrocosm.
